

FIGHT WITH PREJUDICE

Summary

This activity directs us to identify the limiting beliefs that are a common obstacle in our interpersonal communication. Demonization of the difference and rigid thinking are often the basis of violence and exclusion. Building a linking and inclusive community means recognizing and changing the limitations of beliefs we have about ourselves, about others and about the world in general.

Description

Step 1: Learners think about all existing prejudices between people. They make a list of the socio-cultural groups that are the most often exposed to prejudices or the learners have a prejudice about this groups.

Step 2: Everybody tries to find an anti-argument against each prejudice on the list. What is the positive aspect of this socio-cultural group, what is its positive contribution to the society, what can we learn from them etc. Example: all blondes are silly. Anti-argument: an example of a successful blonde (politician, a leader of a company etc.).

Step 3: Learners compare their experiences with different socio-cultural groups. They discuss about their personal experiences, if they were exposed to prejudices themselves.

Materials needed

Paper, pen flipchart.

Methodology

Advice for Trainer

The trainer should prepare a list of socio-cultural groups that are exposed to the prejudices often, as religion groups, ethnic groups, professional groups. The trainer prepare some positive aspects of these socio-cultural groups as well in case the learners do not have their own ideas.

COMMENTARY:

- The trainer should motivate the students to take the lesson seriously.
- The trainer must not impose his opinions about differences between cultures.
